The boyer nor seller was neither Mr. Tomes, Potts, Duer, Shewan, or Watson. Hughes and Erra were themselves the sellers. The shares were their own property. I did not make out the contract notes, but I saw them. Mesers. Hughes and Exra did not appear as principals on those notes but as brokers. I do not know for what the purchaser wanted these sheres. The first transaction was for delivery Slat March, the second was for cash. The purmaer of the 175 shares at $210 paid a portion

i the money and we hold the shares. not hold them now. They were delivered to the nurchaser. I cannot remember the date. I can tell by looking at my backs. This closed the case for the plaintiff, Mr. Francis, in opening the case for the beforce, said as the Attorney-General in hi opening had mentioned; this transaction on the face of it was a very simple thing. The defendant undoubtedly contracted to deliver 50 Rope shares to the plaintiff on the 31st March and h did not deliver them. He repudisted the onatract, and the question for trial on this occasion was whether he was justified in reputiating or not He was perfectly well aware that and proceeding as that did not come before a it of marcautile men with anything particularly its favour, especially when what was repudiated was a contract connected with share transactions, in which, whether they were strictly egal or illegal it was the code of honour and not the strict letter of the law that prevailed. They were all acquainted with the state of the hare market here and the amount of what he would not hesitate to eall gambling that went on. They all thoroughly understood that the greater portion of that business was generally lone in accordance with methods and feshions at S 7 cash. Those are all transactions for month law or strict rights. They were all in the of January. Beginning at first date in January habit of looking upon it in that light and the 95 shares on the 5th January and the 50 at dealing with each other in that manner. There being no market value for these shares, the ordinary rule which applied in cases of this doubtless all well acquainted with the game of poker. They knew that all sorts of "bluff" and hesitation and pretence were infulged invero a part of the game. Men played at the bad none in April.

Cross-examined—I was the seller myself Grimble 25 shares at 381 porchased for game day after day and night after night, and a than about $100, and it was part of defendant's ovidence he intended to call. One of the prince of the princ of his ability within a certain limit to deceive his opponent, and large same of money con-> peating to a court of law. It would be con sidered thoroughly dishonourable for a man to appeal to a court of law to resist his gambling ebts. But there was no priver player who would not for his own sake and is his own interests draw the line at cheating and swindling. Every man was at liberty so far as his actions and expressions were concerned to seek to dece ve his opponent, but no men or sets of players were at liberty to back the cards or to confederate with each other for the purpose of winning; and so one, however invoterate a gambler and howwor thoroughly determined that appeal in all anch matters should be to a court of honour-no one would hesitate for a moment at the very least sign of swindling and cheeting going on outside the fair rule of the game, outside the fair liberty and licence given to each player in that gameto refuse to pay a stake unfairly won. Now Mr. Rustomies, he know and they know, had been for many years a very keen speculator, taking all the changes of the market when they came in his favour undoubtedly. He [Mr. Francis] was perfectly willing, as far as the merits of this case were concerned, to give him and his characconfirmed and inveterate grambler, was perfectly justified in drawing the line some where and insisting that the game he was out on something like the legitimate rules one-before the game began and the stakes were Mr. Potts: that he with a number of other persons shares, deliberately stepped in and by their own outs prevented the defendant from carrying out his contract. They said, furthermore, quite spart from that, even supposing the jury were to hold that the contract was a good one and one that ought to a sertain extent to b. carried with whom he contracted failed to carry it out sible, and that he was absolutely forbidden by law to do anything which would increase those damages. Now what was the position of this Company—this Hongkong Rope Manufacturing Company in respect to the plaintiff a claim to recover $200 damages per share. The Company was started some 4 or 5 years ago. As they heard from Mr. Potts in his cross-examination, and as they must know perfectly well from the reports and information which as business men they had obtained, that Company started with a capital of $150,000 and with land, works, plant &o. valued at something like $160,000 or $170,000. It only got fairly to work in May, 1685. At the

the intrinsic value might be different things, and directors themselves had realised it, that and on making up the accounts for the bocause of this rise in the price of hemp and second year they found that the rope their having manufactured rope from cheap they had sold was sold at a considerable loss to homp, that the year was likely to be an extremeloss of $16,000 or $17,000, which considerably ly good one for the Rope Company, and they had lost over the whole three years a sum of the price of hemp unexpectedly went up to a acquired. ly to pay 12 per cent. Out of the $52,000 proits last year they properly applied a part to my off past loss and a part went to depreciation fund. He thought he would be able to prove rom their articles of association that they were forbidden to pay more than 12 per cent. Suppose they took the dividend at 12 per cent: what was the value of the $50 shares? Was, it any thing over $100? The intrinsic value of the shares given in Messra. Stokes and Young's share list was 554. There were two reasons why he asked them to consider and bear particularly is mind the intrinsic value of these shares. First, because there must be some relation between the price a man was willing to pay for a number of shares in the market and the intrinsic value of them, or between their value as an interest. bearing investment and the prices that parties in the market were willing to give. Therefore. in considering all the transactions which had taken place during Januar . February and March. he would ask them to bear in mind their intrippic value as an interest-bearing stock and the market value. It was part of defendant's which, if they came to be investigated in a court case, if they got as far as the question of of law, probably would not hold water. The con- damages, that there was on the 31st Mar h; tracts were generally in forms that would not be when this contract fell due, no market value for recognised—blank transfers and unfitted up these shares. And he thought his Lordship scrips. The greater portion of the basiness would tell them that by market value could only was a question of honour and not of strict be meant bond fide, honest, market value before, when a man came forward and repudiat- description could not apply in estimating damexpense had the party been put to by not getting what he had bargained for or what was the value of the thing which he ought to have had. He would put it to the jury that the market value of these shares was never more at the very outset price was over that figure the price was either the price given or made by the parsons who had value of each share and to corner the defendant. or they were the prices given by people who had been let into the same hole as Mr. Rustomjee.

minds to hear the loss, to buy the shares and close the transaction at any expense and they got these shares either from or through the confederates. Now the question in point of law was was there a fair open market, and a fair open market price? He thought tiis Lordship would instruct them that if there were no transactions going on during the greater portion of February and March, except the transactions between Mr. Potts and his companions in this little arrangement, or between these gentlemen and persons who were compelled by their operations to buy a fow shares at any prior, that that did not constitute a fair of bonest, or open, or bone fide market for the purpose of astimating damages. He would also tel that in so far as Mr. Potts and his companions—assuming of course that they found they were working together-had a band in making the market price or so-called warket price, there ter entirely into the bands of the jury, but Mr. was really none. It was also part of defendant's Rustonijes, supposing they set him down as a case that Mr. Potts, unlike some other persons whose names had been mentioned in the course of the proceedings, had no contracts on hand which he was obliged to take up If he had had to go into the market himself and purchase shares at an exerbitant valun the jury would be entitled to take that into consideration in estimating his damages or hi loss. If similarly, although there was no market. for these shares or no market value for them. if when they could not get the exact thing such as in the case say of purchasing shirtings. they could get something different in the market, got brokers were, according to his own evidence. something a little better by paying a little more, then another claim for damages would come in. But in this case so far as the ordinary rule for assessing damage was concerned, there was no market value and Mr. Potts incurred no less. They maintained that he had not to pay out damages to anybody, that he did not loss because had had the money represented by the 394 per figure. What possible reason could be have for share in his possession. He had not been called paying such a price for these shares unless he knew upon to pay that, and all that he was entitled perfectly well whether at that period he was or to was the difference, if any, between this chewan, Mr. W. Shewan, Mr. Ducr, and Mr. 394 per share and what the jury consided Grimble were doing, how many shar a they held out, that the damages claimed were excessive and looking over the whole case, looking into together, and unless he had a very clear idea that amount, not by the ordinary course of fair dealing and fair playing, but by the deliberate and intentional action of the plaintiff himself. He thought his Lordship would tell them that where a man had entered into a contract and the person and other persons to raise or keep up unduly and unfairly the price of these shares? should see in the witness box-that they would and rendered himself liable to pay damages, the first person was bound in law to do all he postably could to diminish those damages and rendered his claim upon the defaulter as small as postable are made and unfairly the price of these shares? huy up all the "Ropes" possible and would not be for the state of the self-and the self-and would not be for the self-and the his credit against Mr. Kustomise's by buying Bank, or before he found himself at the Bank up or obtaining on credit all the shares himself

Potts had given him authority to sell his shares, provided that he did not sell under a fixed price, $178, and that Mr. Potts had promised that on his side he would not sall or dispose at his shares with mt communicating with Mr. Showan. Ther found that in that way, Mr. R. They found that gentleman had control over not only his own shares. his had forgotten to mention that Mr. Grimble bad promised not to sell, but he (Counsel) believe late.

Grimble broke away from his contract with Mr. Showan, They would have Mr Grindle in the box later and he would toll them all about it. They found, then, that Mr. Shows a in one way or another had absolute control by ogrement with these other gentlemen of fully 3,000 shares in the Rope Company and there were only 3,000 shares in it. There were also aconsiderable number of shares necessarily held by persons that the opinion of a commercial jury would two things must be looked at. What loss or all, who were not connected with this confederacy there was no question that this confederacy had bought up every share in the market. It was proved from the evidence stready out in and which he should be able to strengthen by the inry for their verdict was whather in any senso these gentlemen confederated together for the purpose of purchasing these shares and deliberately and unfairly raising the price in the market and whether they had not been selling among themselves for the purpose of getting but who rather than face proceedings in a Court quotations which they represented to be those oflaw or have any annoyance, had made up their f bona fide transactions. It was for them to to say whether this confederacy existed for that purpose, and as men of common sense and justice they would be able to judge what the intention of the confederacy was from their conduct and its results. The result of the actions of these gentlemen had been to force up the price of these shares in the market far beyond their legitimate value and to prevent any person who anfortunately had to buy shares from getting them except at such prices as these gentlemen had created. If the jury found that such a confederacy existed, the next question was-was the plaintiff a member of it? The evidence against wan, because they had Mr. Shewan's own state. ment and admissions, while Mr. Potts; so far as words could go, most positively denied that he had anything to do with any conspiracy, confederation, or combinaton for raising the price of these shares. But the inry would have to judge Mr. Potte. not by what he said in the witness box but by his acts at the time when these thing were done. Now, their case was that Mr. Potta was one of the clerks in Messra. Russell & Co.'s. He was possessed of special knowledge of the Company's working and he had frequent conversatious with other gentlemen belonging to the some firm and possessed of this same special knowledge and who were buying up these shares. These gentlemen were all living together and was it rea-schable to doubt that Mr. Potts was not also in nossession of that common knowledge? I have coming in every day and giving him information with regard to "Ropes." They found the plaintiff buying at an enormous ligare, at a monstrous figure, at a figure which there was note single transaction at the time to justify, 420 shares from Mr. Tomes at $170 and 100 shares from somebody else at an equally big or biggoi with Mr. Potts, to see the manager with a view of getting as advance from him, and that when content with competing fairly by his own band he promised to bring some more shares to deposit and his own purse, and his own skill, and his in the Bank he had the proposed agreement with own knowledge of the markets and business Mr. Perry in his mind.
